A new government report presents striking evidence of the decline in the proportion of doctors in this country relative to the size of the population.

The trend is not new but has been in motion for at least the last 20 years. The two most alarming aspects about it are the sharp drops in the proportion of doctors in private practice and in the category of general practictioners.

Last year about two of every three physicians were in private practice. But back in 1931 the ratio was 86 per

This does not mean, of course, that there are actually fewer doctors in private practice. Their numbers have gone up some 20 per cent in recent decades. But the total of persons to be cared for medically has shot up by more than twice that rate.

To add to the problem of the ordinary citizen seeking private medical care, today the physicians who are in private practice are almost equally di-

As a matter of fact, the difficulty of finding a family doctor who is not already overloaded with work can be testified to by countless families in most parts of the country. The search often is long and hard, and is not always successful.

Unless the doctor-to-population ratio is soon reversed, the quest for a good general physician is likely to become steadily more difficult for the growing numbers of Americans.

Some of the best advice I've ever read for young men about to be parried is in a funny and wise book written by a retired general practitioner with the intriguing title, "All About Men." Here are a few of his down-to-earth comments:

"You are thinking of marrying her . . . If she were a man, would you enjoy going on a camping trip with her? Would she carry her share of the wood to the campfire and help clean the fish? Could you sit looking into the fire for an hour after supper without making any effort to be entertaining and be considered neither a boor nor a bore? "All women will try to make you over into their ideal of a Prince Charming, but if the missionary spirit overpowers your flame before marriage and she mentions some of the bad habits she intends to in you later. "Have a fight with her while you're a-courtin'. If she kicks you in the shins or bops you on the chin, all is well. Anybody enjoys a good clean fight, but a dame who weeps and wonders how you can be so cruel is poison. Just remember that a woman's tears generate more power than any waterfall. Also, shun the dame who will never forget wrong and will never be satisfied until she makes you feel like a heel "If you take marriage seriously, discount all the moonlight and

But the victim of self-pity has always to disconnect herself from open resentment. A!ways by recollecting her noble past, she has to try and sell herself the right to feel it.

It is immoral to put up with a need to glorify resentment.

So when we indulge self-pity, the questions are:

"Why do I have to be so glorious? Why can't I have a low-down feeling without having to seek high-up reasons for it? Why can't I let my child know me as I am? Who am I putting on this act for anyway? What has it done for me?"

would not wear the clothes because he was angry.

Not so, said Frank.

"If I hadn't liked the clothes,
I would have told Don so when I picked them up. They are just what I ordered."

Loper is noted as one of the top designers of women's fashions. Col. Charles Northrup, Loper's longtime business partner, com-mented, however: "Don designs furniture, houses, men's haberdashery—anything. He's a designer, period, and an old friend of Frank's.
